Rift and Quartered Sawn

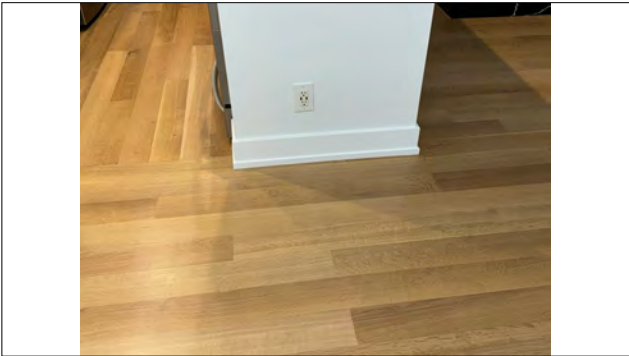

Rift and Quartered grain is achieved through a specific milling technique that differs from the more common, plain sawn style. Logs are cut with the grain intersecting the face of the board at an approximate 60-degree angle. The log is sawn into four quarters and each quarter of the log is sawn perpendicular to the growth rings at an angle, therefore being named rift and quartered. This creates the traditional long lined grain that rift and quartered is known for.
